Why Do I Serve as a Mediator?

For most of my professional life, I have found that people come to me to help them solve problems. As an educator, my goal has always been to guide them through the process, allowing them time and opportunity to reach their own solutions. Formal mediation is a natural evolution of my interests, my skills, and my talents. Having taught conflict management skills to my own students, and to many educators, I have increased my pursuit of knowledge in this field, and this pursuit has led me to mediation.

My natural abilities to listen, to reflect, to draw out others serve me well as a mediator. The many years of experience I have had working in foster care have taught me much about domestic issues and I know that I make an important contribution in the areas of divorce and child custody, and in parent/adolescent mediation.

The Small Claims Mediation process is one that I respect and see as a wonderful alternative to those aggravating issues that should be settled out of court. I have been a volunteer for the Johnson County Small Claims Court, and I am now a volunteer mediator for the Douglas County Small Claims Court.

Excellence in teaching has trained me to be a facilitator. I have always tried to teach my students not to need me, and to convince them that they can be independent, responsible problem solvers. That desire to help others come to agreement is my motive to mediate.
